

Prospective Graduate Students

KAMASI C. HILL

Explore African American Humanities @ the University of Delaware

Join us for a virtual AAPHI recruitment event!

November 10, 2021

Wednesday, November 10th, 2021

4:00 - 6:00 pm EST

4:00 - 5:00 - Presentation by Kamasi C. Hill

5:00 - 6:00 Learn about graduate programs
at UD & Meet UD Department Faculty

Hosted by

Monica A. Coleman, PhD
Professor of Africana Studies & Coordinator of the African American Public Humanities
Initiative at UD - AAPHI

Questions?

afampublichumanities@udel.edu

Pre-Registration is REQUIRED.

Please register HERE

by November 9th, 6:00 pm.

Kamasi C. Hill

is a public scholar with connections to English, Art, History and Black Studies. He's a historian, theologian, educator, art curator, and filmmaker. He has been a public school educator for 25 years and is also an adjunct lecturer in history and religion. He has curated over 250 pieces of original African and African American art and work from his collection has been in several museums, including but not limited to the Museum of Science and Industry, DuSable Museum, and the University of Chicago. His collection has also appeared on the show Empire. Dr. Hill has contributed to several publications, in the field of popular culture, history, and religion. He currently teaches History at Evanston Township High School, and is working on a graphic novel on African American History. He is the filmmaker of the documentary "Born in the Struggle, a film that explores the personal accounts of children born to 1960s and 70s radical activists. The film examines their reflections and ruminations on their childhood, the influences of their parents, and how the activism of their parents affected their life. Notable subjects include Ras J. Baraka, Tupac Shakur, Ayanna Gregory, Fred Hampton Jr., Ta-Nehisi Coates, and Dave Chappelle.

UNIVERSITY OF DELAWARE
ARTS & SCIENCES

<http://www.afampublichumanities.udel.edu>